C. C. POWNING,
RENO, WASHOE CO., NV

The Washington correspondent of the New York Telegram dishes up a bit of political gossip to the effect that Blaine is considering the possibility of removing to the Far West, tempted by a promise of a Senatorial position. The correspondent says:

"As a matter of fact, direct overtures have been made to him from two States to take this step. Blaine has never been very popular in the East. His strength has always been in the West. The people of that section like his dash and vim. He would be an ideal western Senator. One of these States is California. Senator Miller's term expires in March 1887.

All of which suggests reflection on a subject which is at present engaging the thoughts of many people in this State, and that is whether it is right or expedient to select a candidate for United States Senator for Nevada from among those whose affiliations, business or social relations have been with the people of California. The answer, we think, depends upon a full consideration of all the circumstances connected with each particular case. It has been said that Nevada has nearly always been represented in the United States Senate by non-residents, or more correctly stated by San Franciscans. But this is only true in the sense that our Senators have been men whose personal interests on the Pacific Coast have covered so great an area that they made their headquarters in the metropolis of the Pacific Coast. Our present Senators, Jones and Fair, when not engaged in their duties at Washington, are generally to be found in San Francisco. The late William Sharon, during his Senatorial term, was very rarely in Nevada. When Senator Nye's term ended he tarried a while with us and then went to New York where he died. Senator Stewart after his term was over practiced law for some time in Washington, and then settled down to the practice in San Francisco. But who can deny that every one of these gentlemen was not bound to Nevada by many ties of a business and social character? Were not all of them foremost among the men who helped to lay the foundation of this State or to create the industries which sustain it? Is it not true that Nevada has always been represented in Washington by Nevadans? So much for the stereotyped sneer that California has four seats in the United States Senate.

This brings up the question whether it is good policy for us to rule out of the list of candidates big brainy men of national reputation, whether they lived in Maine or California. The United States Senate is the foremost legislative chamber in the world, and each State should endeavor to be represented by men not only of mature years, but who rank with the most renowned in intellectual vigor and grasp. Nevada needs, in this juncture, one who can successfully wrestle on the floor of the Senate with the strongest equipped man intellectually, a man who can in debate enter the lists with such exponents of Eastern public opinion as Evarts, Sherman, Edmunds, Hawley and Anthony. Let us be candid among ourselves about this matter. Who is there among us that is compelled to grub for a living in this sparsely settled State equal to the task of contending for us in such an arena? Ex-Senator Stewart aspires to the honor of again representing Nevada in the United States Senate. He proved himself a faithful and brilliant servant, and when he retired he naturally located himself in the metropolis of the Pacific Coast. What was there for a man of his caliber to do in Nevada? He understands our people, knows their history from the beginning and is in full accord with us on all those questions which affect our interests. If California, which is filled with men eminent in law, literature, trade, science and politics, seeks to strengthen her influence in the United States Senate by inducing Mr. Blaine to represent her in that body, cannot Nevada afford to ask one of her old-time citizens of national reputation to return to her from California and champion her interests in the Senate? We think she can, and that with the momentous problems involved in the settlement of the Chinese and silver questions it is to our interest to do our part in helping to make the Senators from the Pacific Coast the most influential group on the floor of that Chamber. Therefore let Mr. Stewart enter the canvass on his merits and strive for the great prize within the gift of our people, without being assailed at the very outset with the dog-in-the-manger cry that he is not one of us. The door should not be slammed in the face of any man who has ever done this State good service.

A. P. Flint, for 16 years manager of the Pacific Coast department of the Hartford Fire Insurance Company, died at his residence in Oakland Sunday night.

CALIFORNIA.
The Origin of the Name Satisfactorily Traced to Its Source.
San Diego Union.

Scholars puzzled for years unsuccessfully over the name "California." Yet no satisfactory explanation was given. Finally, in about the year 1862, Edward Everett Hale read an article before the American Antiquarian Society as to his discovery of the derivation of this name, which has now been generally accepted. He explains that while reading for the first time the Spanish romance of the "Sergas of Esplandiu" he found in that forgotten romance an allusion to "the Island of California, very near the Terrestrial Paradise," and he recognized it as the true origin of the name California.

Sergas, ch. 157, reads as follows: "Know that, on the right hand of the Indies, there is an island called California, very near to the Terrestrial Paradise, which was peopled with black women, without any men among them, because they were accustomed to live after the fashion of Amazons. They were of strong and hardened bodies, of ardent courage, and of great force. The island was the strongest in the world, from its steep rocks and great cliffs; their arms were all gold and so were the comparisons of the wild beasts which they rode, after having tamed them; for in all the island there is no other metal. They lived in caves very well worked out; they had many ships, in which they sailed to other parts to carry on their forages." This romance is believed to have been printed first in the year 1510, with successive editions in 1519, 1521, 1525, and two editions in 1526, all in Spanish.

It is almost certain that Cortez and his followers in 1535, when they discovered California, must have been acquainted with this romance; and as they sailed up the west side of Mexico, they supposed they were at the "right side of the Indies," as Columbus similarly thought when he reached San Salvador. So that Cortez accordingly gave this romantic name to the land of their discovery, indicative as it was of their belief as to its position, and associated as the name was with golden treasure, which could but prove a felicitous name for the discoverers and a good omen for the land itself—although at that time no revelation of its golden sands had been disclosed.

The Candelaria Mines.

The Carson Index says:

Messrs. Hayward, Hobert and Yerrington have just returned from a trip to Candelaria and assert that the Holmes and Northern Belle mines never looked so promising as at present. They report enough ore in sight to keep two forty stamp mills employed in crushing it for the next five years.

Such being the case we hope the wages of the miners in that district will be restored to the old figures.

In justice to the Carson Appeal we publish the annexed:

A couple of weeks ago the Appeal contained an editorial allusion to Rollin Daggett. Several papers have copied this article, and each one has added or interpolated something mean, until we can hardly recognize the original.

Through long years of acquaintance with Mr. Daggett, we esteem him highly as a personal friend, and his company is worth a dollar an hour to anybody, as he is a wise and intellectual man, full of original ideas and magnetic sunshine. Politically, however, he is the noisiest old humbug we ever met, and no more qualified to run for the U. S. Senate than our great great grandmother would be.

We trust that in the future our contemporaries will stick to the original copy when the Appeal makes mention of Daggett.

Commissioner Black states that the amount asked for the Pension Bureau for the coming fiscal year is less by $1,549,000 than the amount appropriated by Congress for use during the current year. He said also that the amount asked for salaries and the expenses of all kinds for the Pension Bureau is less by $15,000 than the amount appropriated for the fiscal year.

Captain Couch, of the Oklahoma Boomers says that the cattlemen have removed only the fat cattle from the Reservations and rough cattle and cows still remain. He asserts that Senators are beseeching the Department to allow the cattle to remain on account of the trouble and loss attending their removal at this time.

The estate of the author of "The Dance of Death" has been dancing along through the courts of San Francisco since 1878, and is not yet settled.

B. Gratz Brown, who was on Greeley's ticket for second place, died Sunday at his home in Kirkwood, near St. Louis.

A WONDERFUL CAVE.
The Subterranean Marvel of Nevada—A Rival to the Mammoth—What Has Been Discovered in the Hollow Limestone of Jeff Davis' Peak.
Correspondence of the Chronicle.

SNAKE VALLEY, White Pine Co., Nev., December 1, 1885.

Having seen so many accounts of late published in the Chronicle of a cave in Calaveras county, Cal., I thought I would send you a description of a cave we have in this State. It is situated at the foot of Jeff Davis' peak, in Snake Valley, in the southeastern part of the State, and as far removed from the ordinary lines of communication as it could well be. What I shall write will be but a condensed account of the place, for were I to attempt an accurate and detailed description of this series of underground galleries and halls, I should cover a page of the Chronicle. The entrance to the cave was first discovered nine years ago, but little attention was paid to it then, as it was thought to be but a small cavern. Six months ago, however, A. Leman, who owns a large ranch about two miles from the cave, determined to explore it. A party was made up, ropes, lanterns and ladders taken, and the following extraordinary discoveries made: The entrance, or first room, was found to be a large apartment, reached by descending a twenty-five-foot ladder, and was called the dressing-room. Its dimensions are 40x10 feet. By passing through a crevice in the rocky side of the room, just large enough to admit one person at a time, a ledge is reached from which, by a second ladder, a descent is made to a long and lofty apartment, 40 feet long and as many in height, which has been called the room of the ancient gods. To the right, as one enters this spacious hall, lies a large block of gray limestone, of a peculiarly casket-like appearance, to which has been given the name of the old lady's coffin. Opposite the entrance rises a towering stalagmite, which, extending from the floor to the ceiling, reaches a depending stalactite and forms a massive pillar that seems to support the immense vault. On all sides are superb columns, statues, monuments and other innumerable objects.

GALLERIES AND PASSAGES.

The way out of the Room of the Ancient Gods lies through a tunnel of five feet in width, which runs in a southerly direction for 300 feet. At its further end the tunnel widens into what has been called the Music Gallery. Here stands a long row of sheeted stalactites of a pale-yellow color, and about fifteen feet in height, which, when set vibrating by the rubbing of any rough object across them, give forth a very sweet tone. The Music Gallery ends at a rocky barrier about ten feet high, which, being mounted by means of a ladder, gives the visitor access to a long narrow hallway, which has been called the Needle's Eye. This seems to be only a passage over a rock, for at its end another ladder is found necessary for a descent of ten feet. At the foot of this ladder is found the Round Room, a large, irregularly shaped apartment, handsomely ornamented with stalactites of a lovely orange color. A large boulder of a pale yellow lies in the chamber, and greatly resembles a rhinoceros in shape. Once more a ladder is called into requisition for an upward climb, and then a network of chambers and corridors is reached, all decorated with stalactites and stalagmites of a variety of colors and of an infinity of shapes. In one room, for instance, which has been called the Furniture room, are hour glasses, tables, chairs, desks and pulpits almost perfect in shape. Another gallery contains folds of stalactites, like shawls hanging from the walls. One peculiar fact about the cave is that the farther one penetrates, the whiter and more beautiful grows the lime work. Stalactites of a transparent whiteness, and looking exactly like sails, hang from the sides and ceilings. Table-like projections, covered with limestone formations of an opal tint, mingled with others of a snowy whiteness, are noticeable for their remarkable beauty and resemblance to grapes. On all sides is an intricacy of caverns, corridors and chambers branching off into the obscure depths of the mountain, while high masses of stalactitic formation loom up far above the visitor's head, looking, in the dusky light, like enormous gray and white specters.

REEFS AND TUNNELS.

In passing through one spacious apartment there is seen suspended in mid-air a huge boulder with no "visible means of support," looking in such dangerous imminence of falling that the explorer's first impulse is to start away that he may not be crushed to death, second thoughts only suggesting the idea that it has been so suspended for ages, and would probably so continue for as many more. One of the features of this section of the cave is what has been called the Cypress swamp. Small pools of springs of crystal water are mingled with lime formations of snowy white in the form of twigs, dead grasses and reeds, giving it a spongy, marsh-like look. After leaving this collection of wonders and traversing the length of another gallery, the Shoehorn Falls are seen, looking like an immense cascade rolling and tumbling over a bank 25 feet in height. As if to give the falls a still greater verisimilitude, water drips from above them. After traveling through still more corridors Coral Reef is reached. This is a projection of about six feet square, covered with a profusion of "cave pearls" sparkling and translucent and in shape very much like coral. Passing on the visitor arrives at the Oven, a long, low pass or tunnel, about 75 feet long, through which one has to creep on "all four." The tunnel rises for the next 50 feet sufficiently to allow of a stooping posture. Next comes a steep and rocky pass, and then the museum. This great gallery presents a panorama of beautiful scenery, and is the finest room yet discovered in the cave. It is nearly 75 feet in length, is 60 feet in width, and rises to as many feet in height. To the left as one enters is the Grand Cathedral, an enormous pile of white stalagmites, 85 feet in circumference, 25 feet in height and surrounded with a dome of good proportions. To the right is Solomon's Temple, a magnificent stalagmite column, standing out in bold relief against a shadowy background. To the right of this, and resting on a snow bank or pediment, of five feet in height, is Cleopatra's Needle, a slender shaft of alabaster whiteness and beautifully fluted. Extending downward for a foot and covering its top is a glistening covering of frostwork. At the foot of the monolith is what looks like a huge snowball, but which on closer inspection proves to be a delicate fern like calcite crystal, covered with a frosting that sparkles like a thousand diamonds. Words are inadequate to express the beauty of this object.

LAKES AND GROTTOES.

Still further to the right is a retreating wall or high bank completely covered with flowers, trees and shrubbery of miniature size and most delicate tracery. In the center of the room is Lake Como, a tiny lakelet of very cold and clear water. To the left of the Grand Cathedral is another seeming waterfall which has been christened Niagara. It falls over a bank of between twenty-five and thirty feet in a vast sheet of shining, ice-looking stalagmites. Climbing up over another high bank by clinging to the stalactites for support the visitor finds himself in the Angels' Grotto. This is a small nook or bower of about six feet long and five feet wide, walled in on all sides by white stalagmites. The floor of this little spot is of ice-like stalagmites, while white sheets of stalactite are draped on all sides in graceful and artistic folds as if to keep the place sacred from all eyes. The floor of this bower is thirty-five feet above the level of the floor of the Grand Museum. Below are Solomon's Temple, the Cathedral and other towering columns casting back their black and ghostly shadows. From the bower one proceeds through Rock-eye pass along low tunnels through which, after creeping about seventy-five feet, one reaches the Big Room. This is the largest apartment in the cave, as it is the most remote that has been visited in this direction. It is 500 feet long, 200 feet wide and 150 in height. There is very little ornamentation in the room, but its immense size makes it a wonderful sight. A great pile of boulders 100 feet in height has been thrown from above into the center of the hall by some terrible convulsion of nature. The exit may be reached by another series of passages, but it would take three days to explore the whole extent of the cave. Mr. Leman expects to make still more extensive discoveries. He has already expended much time and labor in making some of the galleries accessible, and intends to blast out a number of other passages for the benefit of people who may visit the cave. A noted professor of Nevada will shortly come here on a trip of exploration and for the purpose of making a scientific report on the wonder. Mr. Leman has sent three boxes of specimens to the State Fair at Reno, and already the fame of the cave has brought hundreds of people to the spot from Utah and Eastern Nevada.

Two Rich Men Compared.

The Washington National Republican in an editorial concerning sundry rich men, has the following: But viewing Vanderbilt's life at its best, how poor and of little worth it seems in comparison with that of Leland Stanford. Vanderbilt constructed no great works; he bought but did not build railroads; he kept in motion the ball that his father had rolled and finally grew to be worth one hundred millions. Stanford's life has been a great factor in developing the resources of the country; he has planned and executed grand enterprises which have added immensely to the sum total of the world's happiness. He has been a source of competency to thousands who might else have continued to live in poverty. Through his labors the possessions of great communities have been doubled or quadrupled in value, and now, while yet in the activity of a busy, great career, he takes a large portion of his wealth and voluntarily lays it on the altar of benevolence—a gift to humanity.

Gen. Robert Toombs, of Georgia, is reported in a dying condition.

Dun Glen Placer Mines.

The Silver State says: Burrell Monroe says the Barber Canyon placer mines near Dun Glen, are not turning out as well as anticipated. Water is encountered before the bed rock is reached, and the Chinese, who are working the mines, cannot control it. They have ordered pumps, and until they arrive they cannot accomplish but little, as the gold bearing gravel is below the water line. Chinese have commenced prospecting in Auburn canyon, this side of the Dun Glen range, but with what success he had not ascertained.

HEADQUARTERS OF THE CITIZENS' COMMITTEE,
CARSON CITY, Nev., Dec. 7, 1885.
To Nevada State Journal

DEAR SIR:—By resolution of the Citizens' Committee having in charge measures looking to the reopening of the United States Mint in our State, a public meeting of the citizens of Nevada has been appointed to meet at Carson City on Saturday, November 19, 1885, at 8 o'clock P. M., to take into consideration an address to the President of the United States, and such other matters pertinent to the question as may be suggested on that occasion. Eminent speakers have been invited to be present and address the meeting. It is earnestly desired that the assemblage shall be large, and as fully representative of all portions of the State of Nevada as possible. The time now intervening is short, but unavoidably so, in view of the importance of the matter in hand and the necessity of prompt action. This is a State affair—one in which every citizen is interested.

You are most respectfully and urgently invited to be present in person at the meeting and take part in its deliberations. Should you be unable to be present, a letter expressive of your views and wishes upon the question of the reopening of the mint would be most acceptable.

Very Respectfully,
Your Obedient Servant,
H. S. MASON,
Chairman of the Committee.
WELLS DEURY, Secretary.

An Exciting Race.

About 3 o'clock on last Saturday afternoon travelers on the Virginia road between Reno and the residence of J. C. Smith, about two and one-half miles south of town, were greatly edified by a hotly contested race between a fine racer driven by one Reno's most prominent divines, and a span of well matched flyers, driven by one of the wealthiest members of his flock. When near the ranch of George Deremer the double team broke badly and settled down to a dead run, gaining several lengths on the minister's horse, who was at this stage of the race about ten lengths in the rear. This distance in the lead of the Parson and his flyer was maintained by the double team until Bachelor's Avenue was reached, when the minister's horse, by a brilliant burst of speed, shot ahead of the double team and passed Mr. Smith's residence about twenty lengths a head, winning the heat and race. I have not seen a record of the time made, but it is estimated by a very good judge of speed that when the Parson's horse passed the residence of George Deremer he was going at least a 2:50 gait.

TRAVELER.

The Knights have all their arrangements perfected for their masquerade ball. The prizes are now on exhibition at Herz's jewelry store and S. J. Hodgkinson & Co.'s drug store.

The west-bound passenger train had on eight sleepers and coaches, besides the regular mail, express and baggage cars. A double-header pulled it out.

Depend upon it, mothers, there is no mistake about it.
